Liver enzymes are substances produced by the liver that can be measured with a blood test. Any elevation in an enzyme level may be a sign of a liver problem, and aspartate aminotransferase (AST) and alanine aminotransferase (ALT) are two of the enzymes central to such an investigation. When used comparatively, AST and ALT can help identify liver toxicity, liver disease, or liver damage.

Software quality plays an important role in the software lifecycle. Traditional software defect prediction approaches mainly focused on using hand-crafted features to detect defects. However, like human languages, programming languages contain rich semantic and structural information, and the cause of defective code is closely related to its context.
