Pleadings in Every Personal Injury Case. Each year, there are thousands of personal injury claims that are the result of injuries sustained due to the negligence or intentional conduct of someone else. Many of these cases result in a monetary award being issued to the injured party. While there are thousands of cases filed each year, many cases are settled prior to an action ever being filed.

In California, for example, personal injury complaints should not demand a specific dollar amount. In other states, a plaintiff is expected to make a specific demand. Keep in mind that even if a specific amount of money is demanded, it may not reflect the actual value of your personal injury claim. In fact, the amount of money claimed in the complaint is often far higher than what the plaintiff could recover even if the plaintiff were to win at trial.
